THE BATTLE OF WARD'S ISLAND.

The morning of the 5th of March came bright and bountfull, with a brilliant sun overhead and a brisk frost to warm the carry of the combatants. After breakinst had been to the Emigrant's Reinge, the Germans, to the number of three hundred or more, assembled under their leaders, and gathering all the weapons they could find, knives, pistols, clubs, and stones, they recived their instructions, and marching from the apper and of the island poured down in overwhelming numbers on the Irish, who were scattered here and there is groups of two and threes, discussing the affair of the day previous. But a few of the Irish resisted, as they were not armed, and those who did sitempt to make any resistance were soon overpowered and had to run for it, deeming discretion the better part of valor. A fearful concluding the same of valor. A fearful concluding the same of the Irish, many of whom took refuge in the hospital building, the bake-house and the different out-house.

Ward's island, in the Ease River, is shisland of 100 acres or thereaboyta, devoted by the Commissioners of Emigrasion to the use of emigrants who have no employment or place to live, on landing in this city from Europe. There are anumber of buildings on the island occupied by emigrants of all mationalities but principrily composed of Germans and Irish, with a slight sprinkling of English and Scotch. There are at present 1,000 emigrants of both sexes on the island, including children. For some time past, considerable bud feeling has existed between the German and Irish, and it only remained for some riotously disposed person to open hostilities and the majority would be sure to tollew his bad advice and example.

On Wednesday evening the existing bad feeling between the Irish and Germans hod to adfillently between a German who could not speak a wird of English, and an Irishman, who was as bad as regards knowledge of the noble German language. Who began the row no one can tell, but suffice to say that the German stabbed the Irishman badly, and a small but select party of both nationalities joined in the fracus. Quiet was restored, but a heartburning was lieft behind.

John Eston Cooke is writing for the Southern Society some interesting reconstitute of the Linked States.

We learn all this from a letter by Grant senior to the New York Ledger. We are also indebted to the same source for the knowledge of the fact that when Ulysses was about twelve years old (an eventful period in the file of this great boy) he won half a dozen marbies by jumping twenty five feet down a bluff and slicking in the mud. Again, "when he was about twelve years old," he drove a couple of young ladies into a swollen creek. The water arose to their waists. They screamed.

"In the mists of the excitement Ulysses, who was on a forward seat, looked back to the ladies, and with an air perfectiv undisturbed, merely said: "bon't speak—I will take yon through sefs."

But papa neglects to say whether Ulysses took them through or not.

We are anxiously awaiting to see how the yond father of this wonderial boy will explain I is son's correspondence with the President. In our opinion that performance celipses any ving Ulysses ever did "when he was about twelve years old."
